

MORE SUITS AGAINST GEN. BUTLER.—A letter from New York, in the Philadelphia Ledger, says: Another batch of suits for the recovery of damages has been instituted against Gen. Butler, in the Supreme Court Chambers. The plaintiffs are some cases citizens of New Orleans, and in other cases citizens of Virginia, and all claim to be and have been loyal men.

The most serious of these complaints or suits is based upon the allegation that Gen. Butler had, by virtue of his power in New Orleans, compelled a Mr. Honiwell to transfer the steamer Carlotta worth $60,000, to himself personally for $40,000, in a currency worth but $28,000; had, through his agent, sent this vessel on a private venture for his own advantage, which it was insinuated was to supply the rebels with quinine, &c.; and then through this agent had chartered it to the Government for $350 per day, though the original owner was willing to charter it to them at $50 per day, and had ultimately "run her under" near the end of the war, and obtained for her $40,000. It was claimed, therefore, that in no sense could it be said that this had been done under authority from the President or Congress.

Gen. Butler's counsel contend that these acts were done in accordance with Government authority, and moves, therefore, that they be transferred to a Federal court for adjudication. The court promised a decision in a day or two.
